TRIUMPH AND TEARS

The 49ers defeated North Alabama 75-65 on homecoming.

By Daniel Van Hoosier
Staff Writer

It wasn't pretty at times, but the new-look Long Beach State men's basketball team was able to grind out a season-opening win in front of 5,501 49er faithfuls at the Walter Pyramid on Saturday.

The Beach (1-0) celebrated homecoming by defeating North Alabama, 75-65 behind a balanced scoring attack. The crowd was the second-largest in Pyramid history, just behind last season's contest against Big West Conference rival Cal State Fullerton (5,649).

The two teams combined for 49 turnovers (26 by LBSU) and were clearly trying to simply get a feel for one another throughout the game. Another area of concern for The Beach was an abysmal 15 out of 26 (57.7 percent) shooting performance from the free-throw line.

James Ennis paced The Beach with 19 points to go along with six rebounds, two steals and an assist. The senior guard matched his career-high in scoring and punctuated the effort with a breakaway, one-handed slam dunk which sent the crowd into a frenzy.

Ennis said the win was important for a team that is trying to come together as a group and become more comfortable with one another.

"Staying together, not going off and everyone doing their own thing was good today," he said. "Being vocal felt good."

The 'Niners took a 13-point lead into halftime after sophomore Kris Gulley knocked down a straightaway three-

Students to see refund for tuition increase

The refunds for fall 2012's tuition hike are made possible by Prop. 30's passage.

By Daniel Serrano
Assistant City Editor

Proposition 30's passage has temporarily stabilized declining state support for the Cal State University system and allowed Cal State Long Beach to do what some students thought to be unthinkable — reduce tuition.

With the fee refunds, rescissions and reductions that Prop. 30's passage instigated, students may pay up to $498 less for next semester's tuition, according to CSULB Vice President of Administration and Finance Mary Stephens.

An education trailer bill passed in June by the state legislature arranged for a tuition buyout deal for California universities, which required that the CSU roll back its 9 percent tuition increase for this fall in exchange for an additional $125 million in state funding in 2013-14. In August, the CSU decided to take the deal should Prop. 30 pass.

Now, with the proposition's passage, CSULB will refund $498 to students to make up for the 9 percent tuition increase. The disbursement of the funds will be split into two payments of $249,

Cal State Long Beach students can start practicing for Black Friday campouts by lining up at the Walter Pyramid Thursday to gain free priority entrance tickets to the men's basketball game against the University of North Carolina Tar Heels at 7:05 p.m. on Friday.

Red Bull will be hosting the 49ers' campout event where students can start lining up as early as 8 a.m. Thursday but will not be awarded tickets until 8 a.m. Friday. Associated Students Inc. Senator-at-Large

ASI, administration seek options to reopen art lockers

There has been discussion of creating outdoor lockers.

By Daniel Serrano
Assistant City Editor

Art students hoping for some relief in their backs and arms will have to wait a little longer.

The art lockers, which once provided storage space for art studrents, will not reopen, according to School of the Arts Director Jay Kvapil.

The College of the Arts (COTA) and Associated Students Inc. are looking into other solutions, such as an outdoor locker area or integrating lockers into classrooms, according to Kvapil.

The art lockers, which closed at the beginning of the semester due to safety concerns, will be converted into needed classroom space, Kvapil said.

COTA originally set aside $100,000 in 2010 as part of a one-time $10 million restoration fund to Cal State Long Beach from the state to provide a new locker area for art students. When state support was cut in the following year's budget, the money was relocated to fill funding gaps.

"We're deep in discussion with several administrators about possible solutions," Kvapil said. "We have assembled a team to look into solutions, and we met last week and revisited the possibility of outdoor lockers, and the fiscal planning team is looking into that."

ASI will vote on Wednesday on a resolution to officially support efforts to reopen the art lockers. ASI Senator Kalifa Sprowl said COTA officials are helping student efforts to reopen the art lockers.

"Both our deans and the school of art director acknowledge the effort that has been placed within this resolution, and they are working with us to help advocate this need," she said.

Kvapil said that although decorating and painting the lockers acted as a rite of passage for art students, it became a problem as off-campus groups began tagging the lockers.

When students started complaining about suspicious people in the locker room at night, Kvapil said closing the lockers became necessary.

"We heard students were feeling unsafe," he said. "We can't in good conscience allow the locker room to stay open."

Talks of closing the lockers are nothing new, according to Kvapil. He said the issue was first discussed more than 15 years ago, and a plan to relocate the lockers was being worked out several years ago.

Stefan Agregado | Daily 49er
The doors to the student art lockers will remain closed for the year.

"It's quite amazing to walk into it because it's the most amount of graffiti you'll ever see in one place," Kvapil said. "It went from being art students writing clever things to tagging and from tagging to gangs."

Prop. 30

one of which will automatically reduce spring tuition. The second will either reduce spring 2013 tuition by another $249, bringing the cost down to $2,487, or may be sent as a refund check to students who fill out a form requesting it.

Had Prop. 30 failed, spring 2013 tuition would have been $3,135.

Over the weekend, the Bursar's Office began reducing fall tuition fee amounts, according to an email from Nicolas Valdivia, director of financial aid at CSULB. Students were expected to see a credit balance appearing on their student accounts.

Stephens said she thinks most students will opt to have the money put towards spring tuition.

"With registration so close, they'd have to put it right back in tuition once they got it," Stephens said.

Students not returning next semester, however, will need to fill out a Request for Refund form, according to Stephens. Students who received financial aid will not be refunded the first installment of $249 but will have the second installment taken off of next semester's tuition.

According to Valdivia's email, students' final credit balances will be released to them by Dec. 1. Students who are already signed up for eRefund, because of past financial aid, will not need to submit a Request for Refund form.

While students across campus count the cash they have saved, campus administrators say that classes have also been saved.

"Had [Prop. 30] failed, we would have had $5 million less for classes," CSULB Vice Provost David Dowell said.

Our graduates don't just make the grade, they raise the bar.

New club team tries to make a splash

The water polo club team looks for a place to practice.

By Stefanie Akesson-Petrovic
Staff Writer

Cal State Long Beach's new Water Polo Club is trying to go with the flow — but they need to get in the water first.

The Water Polo Club, which already has more than 20 male students participating, has been added to the list of club sports at CSULB. Sophomore business major Jordan Lisnock and Associated Students Inc. Senator-at-Large Manuel Nieto are trying to get the club ready for spring.

Lisnock said he came up with the idea to start a water polo club at CSULB when he noticed there was not a team club for students. He said the club is for everyone, including those who played in high school but do not want to play competitively in college.

Those who are playing competitively, however, are on the NCAA Division I Long Beach State water polo team. However, according to Nieto, it is hard for an average person to be part of that team.

"There is nowhere to play just to have fun, maybe compete outside the school once in a while," Nieto said. "So that's why Jordan [Lisnock] wanted to start a club."

One of the biggest differences between the water polo club team and Long Beach State's NCAA Division I team is that it is less competitive, according to Lisnock.

"The coaching and practice is less intense," Lisnock said. "It is more of a relaxed condition than the actual team. It would be more chill."

Lisnock and Nieto have been working on getting the club started for more than five weeks. According to Nieto, four of those weeks were spent on waiting for pool time approval.

"We are already recognized by Student Life & Development and the kinesiology [department] as a club," Lisnock said. "We just don't have anywhere to practice, and we are at this point where we are trying to get approval for pool time, and that is a hard process."

Nieto said that the club is still waiting for pool time because the water polo team is in the middle of its season and needs the pool for practice.

"All [the club asks] for is two, three hours a week, and I don't see the problem," Nieto said. "That's why I met with people to see what the problem is and so we can fix it."

The Long Beach State water polo team usually plays games Thursday and Friday nights. Nieto said he is trying to find time conflict resolutions.

The Collegiate Water Polo Association has leagues throughout the U.S., and when the water polo club is ready, it plans on playing in the Pacific Coast League, Linsock said. Because water polo is a fall sport, Linsock said that the club will have to wait until next year.

"We will try to establish ourselves for next year because the finals were last weekend; it's already over," Lisnock said.

CSULB renames Residence Hall building C in honor of Naomi Rainey, who has been providing housing scholarships for students since 1988.

Residential dorm named after donor

Naomi Rainey offers scholarships to students who can't afford housing.

By Vivian Gatica
Contributing Writer

Cal State Long Beach alumna Naomi Rainey has been providing student-housing scholarships for more than 20 years.

Now, she has received a notion of kindness in return by getting a dormitory named after her.

Residence Hall building C has been renamed the Naomi Rainey House in recognition of the alumna's generosity to CSULB.

Since 1988, Rainey has provided the university with the Rainey-Pierson Scholarship to aid students who wish to live on campus but do not have the financial resources to. The money comes from the trust of her late husband and CSULB alumnus, Paul Pierson.

Cal State Long Beach dedicated and performed the ribbon-cutting ceremony for the Naomi Rainey House on Nov. 1. Scholarship recipients, CSULB President F. King Alexander and Vice President for Student Affairs Douglas Robinson were all speakers at the event.

Rainey lived on the second floor of Residence Hall building C while she attended the university in the late 1960s and early 1970s. She graduated from CSULB in 1972 with a bachelor's degree in theater arts and a minor in African American studies.

Rainey also received two master's degrees, one in education and the other in school administration and supervision, in 1982.

Rainey said that she attributes most of her success to her experiences at the university. She also holds several teaching credentials.

"I was honored that they thought that much of me for the service and support that I've provided for the school, but humbled because as a person, and based on my religious background in teaching, we are taught to serve not for recognition, but because it's the right thing to do," Rainey said.

She also said that the university provided her with excellent teachers; a nurturing, warm environment; and a quality, prestigious education.

"I wanted to show my appreciation for their support, for their helping me to become a well-rounded person and for their being a resource for the rest of my life," Rainey said.

Carol Roberts-Corb, director of housing and residential life, said that the university appreciates Rainey in her helping other students to have the chance to live on campus.

"We are grateful that Ms. Rainey recognizes the value of living on campus, and is assisting future residents in this way, and that a person of her stature values the time she spent studying at CSULB," Roberts-Corb said via email. "Because of her gift, these future residents will have the opportunity to learn and grow, and to engage in our university in ways that they couldn't have if they lived off campus."

Camp out

Manuel Nieto said that 2,000 free priority entrance tickets are available to be distributed to the students who camp out.

Students will find food, drinks and activities available to entertain them while they wait. Free Domino's pizza will be given out, and members of the men's basketball team will talk and hang out with students while they wait.

The 49ers and the Tar Heels are playing against each other for the third straight season, but this will be their first match in the CSULB Walter Pyramid.

ASI President John Haberstroh said additional seating will be available because a large crowd is expected for the game.

"It's a big deal because North Carolina is one of the top ranked men's basketball teams in the country," Haberstroh said. "It will be a pleasure to have them on our campus, and we're going to give them the best fight that we can."

Long Beach State athletics is trying to generate the same energy and excitement it saw when traveling to games at other big basketball universities on the East Coast, where campouts are a regular event, according to Nieto.

"We are expecting at least 2,000 students at the game, which is why the campout is a great opportunity," Nieto said. "There will be a three-tier entrance system to the game, and students who obtain their tickets by camping out will have priority entrance to the game."

The second tier will be for the Monson Maniacs, or students who paid $10 per season for food, drinks and admission to the games, Nieto said. The third tier will be for general admission.

For those unable to camp out the entire time because of work, school or other obligations, Nieto said they can ask a friend to wait for them. One person can hold up to four spots in line, but all four students must be present at 8 a.m. Friday morning, according to Nieto.

Haberstroh said that he hopes CSULB students will see more events like the campout in the future.

"We are hoping to change the culture at CSULB to a fun and exciting campout tailgating basketball school," he said.

Fake cash spent at USU, forwarded to Secret Service

There is no student connection with the counterfeit $20 bills, police say.

By Anthony Garza
Staff Writer

Four fake $20 bills were passed at the University Student Union at 11:15 a.m. on Nov. 2, University Police Captain Scott Brown said. Police took the bills, filed a report and forwarded the bills to the Secret Service for destruction, Brown said. There is no student information connected with this incident, Brown said.

An intoxicated woman allegedly refused to pay her cab fee when brought to the Visitor Information Center.

Vocabulary test

A male non-student became verbally abusive with a test administrator when he did not have the proper identification to take his SAT test at 8:49 a.m. on Nov. 3, Brown said. The test was being administered in Language Arts building 5, Brown said. Police arrived, and the non-student left with no further incident, Brown said.

Gold car evades city and campus police

University Police assisted the Long Beach Police Department in checking the campus and surrounding streets for a gold Lincoln Town Car occupied by two men at 3:26 a.m. on Nov. 6, Brown said. The driver allegedly failed to yield for a LBPD officer who was attempting to stop the vehicle near Bellflower Boulevard and Anaheim Road, Brown said. Neither LBPD nor University Police were able to locate the vehicle or the suspects, Brown said.

Sticky Fingers at CSULB

Belongings were reported stolen between 10:45 a.m. and 12 p.m. from the men's locker room at the Student Recreation and Wellness Center Wednesday, Brown said. The belongings included a wallet, watch, wedding ring and a backpack, Brown said. No information on the suspect is available, Brown said.

A bike tire was stolen from a bike rack outside of Parkside College at 6:07 p.m. Tuesday, Brown said. The suspect attempted to steal the bike and was unsuccessful, so he or she decided to take the tire instead, Brown said. No suspect information is available, Brown said.

A backpack was stolen from the Walter Pyramid at 1:23 p.m. on Nov. 3, Brown said. The female student was concerned about the loss of her backpack because her keys were located inside the backpack, Brown said.

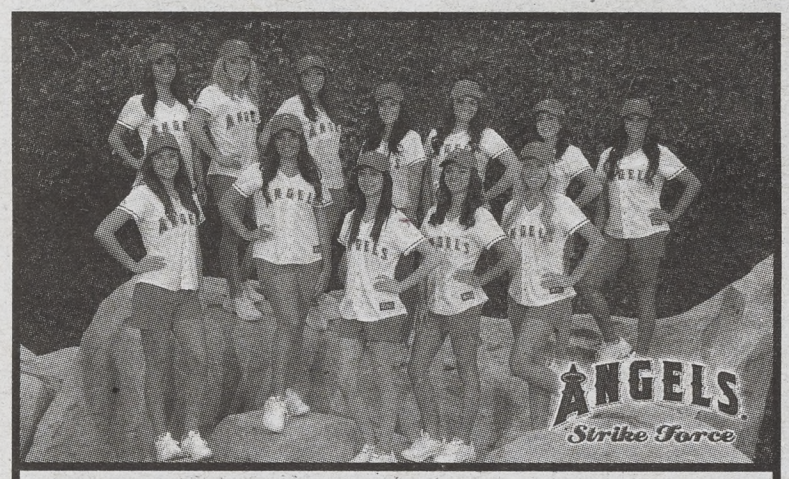

University Police went with the student to check on her car and nothing seemed to be tampered with, Brown said. No suspect information is available, and the incident is under investigation, Brown said.

Intoxicated woman stiffs cab driver

A cab driver dropped off an intoxicated woman at the Visitor Information Center on Beach Drive at 12:53 a.m. on Nov. 2, Brown said. The woman allegedly refused to pay her cab fare, and University Police met with both parties, Brown said. The intoxicated woman was released to family members rather than arrested for public intoxication, and the cab driver left without payment, Brown said.

University Police found a 30-pack of Bud Light in Parking Lot 14D at 7:56 p.m. on Nov. 1, Brown said. The beer was recovered by University Police and dumped, Brown said.

David Petraeus resigns as CIA director after admitting affair

WASHINGTON — CIA director David Petraeus unexpectedly resigned Friday, citing "poor judgment" after engaging in an extramarital affair.

In a statement sent to CIA staff, Petraeus said he had personally delivered a letter of resignation to President Obama on Thursday, which was accepted Friday.

"After being married for over 37 years, I showed extremely poor judgment by engaging in an extramarital affair," Petraeus said. "Such behavior is unacceptable, both as a husband and as the leader of an organization such as ours."

Petreaus, who turned 60 this week, assumed leadership of America's fabled spy service in September 2011, replacing Leon E. Panetta, who became secretary of Defense.

He previously served as top commander in Afghanistan, head of U.S. Central Command, and top commander in Iraq.

Petraeus' wife, Holly, is an official with the new Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. A long-time military wife, she was appointed in 2011 as head of the agency's Office of Servicemember Affairs, which looks out for the financial interests of people in the armed services.

White House press secretary Jay Carney, who was holding his regular press briefing as news of the resignation broke, declined to offer any details. But in a statement released later, Obama thanked Petraeus for his "extraordinary service."

"By any measure, he was one of the outstanding general officers of his generation, helping our military adapt to new challenges, and leading our men and women in uniform through a remarkable period of service in Iraq and Afghanistan, where he helped our nation put those wars on a path to a responsible end," he said.

"As director of the Central Intelligence Agency, he has continued to serve with characteristic intellectual rigor, dedication, and patriotism. By any measure, through his lifetime of service David Petraeus has made our country safer and stronger."

MCT

Saying that he had shown "extremely poor judgment," CIA Director David Petraeus, seen in this 2010 file photo, a retired general popular on both sides of aisle, resigned Nov. 9 after admitting to having an extra-marital affair.

Obama said he was confident the CIA would "continue to thrive and carry out its essential mission."

Michael Morell, the agency's deputy director, will serve as acting director.

"My thoughts and prayers are with Dave and Holly Petraeus, who has done so much to help military families through her own work. I wish them the very best at this difficult time," he said.

James Clapper, director of National Intelligence, praised Petraeus' decades of service to the country "in uniform and out."

"Of all the exceptional men and women I have worked with over the years, I can honestly say that Dave Petraeus stands out as one of our nation's great patriots," Clapper said in a statement.

James Puzzanghera contributed to this report.

CSULB homecoming court has little relevance

OUR VIEW

Why does a university still have a homecoming court?

That is the question that we and many other Cal State Long Beach students asked ourselves when our Facebook inboxes were inundated by messages begging us to vote for homecoming king or queen.

We understand, it is tradition, but honestly not too many people care about our university's homecoming king or queen.

In fact, most of us do not even know who these people running are.

In high school, it was always a popularity contest. It was usually the high school quarterback and the leader of the cheer team, who both have full-rides to some Ivy League school, who would be crowned. They would usually bully their handful of loyal drones to turn in an obnoxious amount of votes so they can ride around on the float at the homecoming football game.

But that was so high school, right?

Wrong! That same popularity contest transcends into universities around the nation, and it leaves many of us wondering, why?

In college, however, the ego required to run for homecoming king and queen has to be through the roof. In high school you had to be nominated by your peers, whereas at CSULB you have to nominate yourself by filling out an application through BeachSync, meaning that the very few who use BeachSync have the chance to be homecoming king or queen.

Besides that, what is the homecoming court's responsibilities after they are courted and have won? There are none. So, after spending all this time building up to the announcement at the homecoming game, immediately after they win, nothing changes. The winners just get a chance to be the only people in the Walter Pyramid wearing a sash and a fake gold crown.

Woop-de-freakin-do.

With the amount of Facebook messages we received about voting for homecoming king and queen this year, it seemed like many of our peers cared more about homecoming rather than the presidential election. We doubt this was because of frustration associated with an electoral college.

The point of the homecoming court is to be representative of our school, but how representative can the winner be if the only candidates are from the Greek system? With so many organizations around campus, it does not seem like a variety to choose from. Then again, perhaps this lack of variety stems from the lack of interest from CSULB students.

Unless there is a way to get a better representation of our campus involved with the homecoming court, then our king and queen will remain irrelevant. That is doubtful, so maybe we should get rid of the court anyway. We do not think too many people will mind.

Everybody makes mistakes, but Petraeus will never recover

SHANE NEWELL

In a week highlighted by the reelection of President Barack Obama and hurricane relief efforts on the East Coast, news of CIA Director David H. Petraeus' resignation fell to many deaf ears.

Petraeus announced his resignation in the wake of an extramarital affair he was having with his biographer, after having been married for nearly 40 years.

According to sources, Petraeus met with Obama Thursday and then resigned Friday.

Affairs are nothing new in high positions in the U.S. government; just take a look at former President Bill Clinton's much talked about cheating with Monica Lewinsky.

Petraeus, a man whose qualifications as a military commander could have easily qualified him as a future presidential candidate, may have made serious errors that could be unforgiveable.

Petraeus' complete lack of self-discipline may have cost him more than his highly sought after position. If Petraeus told his biographer (girlfriend) confidential information, he may have committed the ultimate crime against the U.S.

It is unclear whether Petraeus divulged any confidential information to his mistress.

Military secrets may have slipped out of Petraeus' mouth, along with the words "off the record."

Petraeus' affair not only hurt himself but the ever-decreasing positive image of the U.S. government.

According to Politico.com, the U.S. government has an approval rating of only 17 percent.

Petraeus' affair will only hurt this rating.

One would think as CIA Director, the premier position in the world's greatest intelligence agency, Petraeus would've exhibited more self-discipline.

Turns out he didn't, and it shows.

Defense for Petraeus has sprung up in the most unlikely of places, from recently reelected Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.).

Feinstein said early Sunday that she would investigate the FBI's handling of the Petraeus case.

It was the FBI that first uncovered the affair, through a separate investigation of Petraeus' biographer.

The methods by which the FBI found out about the affair have gained widespread criticism.

Regardless, Petraeus should have resigned and probably come out earlier about his compromised judgment.

After a long career as a four-star general and Commander of U.S. Forces in Afghanistan, Petraeus' career should not be entirely defined by this affair.

It is true that humans make mistakes everyday, yet the public seems to hold high-ranking officials to a higher standard.

Rightfully so, as the president shouldn't be able to cheat on his wife or lie about his tax returns, as it would set a bad example for everyone.

Call it right, wrong or indifferent, but high-ranking officials should be held to a higher standard.

On a lighter note, I can't wait to buy Petraeus' new biography. I'm sure it will be quite an "intimate" look at his life.

Daniel Craig reprises his role as James Bond in "Skyfall," the 23rd film in the 007 series. This is the first Bond film directed by Sam Mendes.

'Skyfall' proves James Bond is still relevant after 50 years

The film gives a glimpse into James Bond's psyche.

BY MATT GRIPPI
Diversions Editor

How do you keep a film series fresh after 23 films and 50 years? Somehow, the people behind the latest Bond film, "Skyfall," miraculously found the answer to that question.

There are certain aspects of every James Bond film that audiences have begun to expect. He drinks martinis, makes witty remarks, sleeps with dangerous women and talks back to authority. It takes a skilled writer and director to implement these things without repeating themselves or getting cheesy. Director Sam Mendes (American Beauty) does a beautiful job of including all of these things while also tweaking and playing with the Bond mythology in intriguing ways.

In 2006's "Casino Royale" we were briefly shown Bond's soft side when he fell in love with the beautiful Vesper Lynd, played by Eva Green. "Skyfall" brings back Bond's psychological side by showing how a near-death experience on a job-gone-wrong affects his psyche.

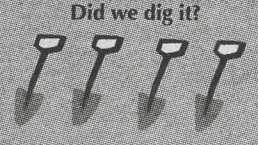

After being betrayed by his own people and presumed dead, Bond returns to MI6 after hearing about a massive terrorist attack on the agency's office. An unknown villain has stolen a list of the secret identities of all of the British undercover operatives and is threatening to reveal five of their names every week. This has made Bond's boss M (Judi Dench) look bad, and the government is threatening to force her into retirement.

The villain turns out to be the evil computer hacker Raoul Silva, a genius programmer who may have connections to MI6 himself. Silva is played brilliantly by Javier Bardem who steals almost every scene he is in.

In 2007 Bardem proved he could play a cold menacing villain in "No Country For Old Men." However, the character of Silva is unlike that character in every way. Instead of cold and calculating, Bardem plays Silva as a playful flamboyant trickster, which makes him seem all the more menacing.

Skyfall

Did we dig it?

4 out of 5 shovels

Bond villains have always been borderline cartoon characters, but Silva has a humanity to him that is rarely seen in these films. Much like "Skyfall" shows us some of what makes 007 who he is, we also get to see what could possibly transform a man into a murderous monster.

"Skyfall" pulls back the curtain on another classic Bond character, M. M has been played by Dame Judi Dench for the past six films. She was even there before Bond went blonde-haired and blue-eyed, back when he looked like Pierce Brosnan.

Not much has really been shown about M's character; she always seemed like someone who is all business. In "Skyfall" we get to see what kind of toll this job has taken on her and how she holds it together when everything starts to go wrong. Dench brings a human quality to the character that we haven't really seen before, and she finally gets some screen time outside of her office.

"Skyfall" manages to teach us more about the characters we know and love while also including all of the action, car chases, sex scenes and espionage that is expected from the series. Because of this, "Skyfall" manages to be more than just another Bond movie and may be the character's greatest adventure yet.

Jeff Atherton challenges the perception of color

"Are We Over the Rainbow?" at the UAM showed visitors how different animals see colors.

BY TIM DICKERSON
Staff Writer

Color is all about context and perception. People perceive colors differently; therefore, the context of a certain color is changed for each person.

Assistant art professor Jeff Atherton challenged the idea of color and how people perceive it when he gave a lecture Thursday evening to a small crowd of about 20 people at the University Art Museum. The lecture was entitled, "Are We Over the Rainbow?"

Atherton said that when he began to study the perception of color, he was fascinated to learn that there were not any first-order principles.

"I couldn't find any universals," he said.

He began his presentation by showing a simple photo of a fire engine. He went on to say that "the fire engine is not red."

The reason for this is because color, or lack of color, is dependent on the person looking at it.

Atherton showed comparisons of what a human sees in a normal photograph and what a dog sees. Dogs only have two cones in their eyes, so a lot of color information in the magenta range is lost in their vision.

A normal flower looks vastly different in terms of color to a bee. Bees see a yellow flower as white with red in the center. The red acts as a "landing pad" for the bee to gather pollen from.

Atherton said the reason bees see flowers that way and humans do not is because flowers are not necessary for human survival as they are for bee survival.

He ended the lecture with a segment on color constancy, a theory developed by Edwin Land. The reason why a car remains the same color throughout the day, despite changes in sunlight, is because of color constancy.

Atherton said the eye builds a colored world around it. The eye uses context of everything in front of it to judge what color an object is.

"You will only use wavelengths as a last resort," he said. Otherwise, the eye will compare colors to make judgments.

Land demonstrated this concept by the Mondrian Test, which he named after artist Piet Mondrian because the test used his composition paintings.

Basically, when looking at the painting as a whole, one would see all the true colors used on the canvas. But when one of the colors is completely isolated, red can turn green.

Atherton was not able to actually demonstrate this test but instead presented it in his slideshow. However, at the end of his presentation, he did a similar demonstration that illustrated the point.

He took two separate lighted boards, both with the same colors, only inverted. Both colors appeared identical when seen with black boards with checkered holes in front of them. When taking the boards away, the two colors appeared drastically different from one another.

"Seeing color is all about context," Atherton said. "Every context matters."

Atherton's lecture was the third and final installment of the Color and Cognition series held at the University Art Museum.

49ers fall from NCAA tournament

LBSU can't erase an early deficit and loses 2-1 to Santa Clara.

By Jason Clark
Sports Editor

Stefan Agregado | Daily 49er

Forwards Nadia Link (12) and Elzabeth Lyons (9) had little luck breaking through Santa Clara's back line, which allowed only seven shots all game.

The sight of Long Beach State women's soccer players walking off the field with tears in their eyes has become unusually common this year, but the tears following the 49ers' 2-1 loss to Santa Clara in the first round of the NCAA tournament had entirely different meaning than those from times past.

In previous instances, the 'Niners found themselves mourning the losses of overtime rivalry games and key Big West Conference matches. This time, their emotions were triggered by the loss of their season and the seven seniors that will never play another game for The Beach.

"It's a little disheartening, but these are the best years of my life," senior forward Nadia Link said. "I'm always going to remember this."

Despite taking the majority of time of possession and playing well up to the level of the seventeenth-ranked Broncos, LBSU (12-8) allowed two goals in the first half and created a hole it couldn't climb out of.

"For the most part, I thought we played pretty well," head coach Mauricio Ingrassia said. "[The first goal] was in traffic, and [goalkeeper Marrina Meyers] didn't see it. The second goal was very soft. We fought, but we ran out of time in the second half."

The 49ers got one back in the 71st minute when senior defender Alex Balcer headed in her third goal of the season off a free kick. They spent the vast majority of the remaining 19 minutes playing offense but couldn't seem to break through a stifling Santa Clara back line.

The clock eventually wound down to all zeros, and LBSU was left with not much more than memories and a quiet bus ride home.

"I'm very proud of the team," Ingrassia said. "They put together a very strong effort through a lot of adversity and got us to the NCAA tournament. We put up a tough fight and we might have been able to get a little more luck and get a better result, but I'm proud of the way that the team has played. It's been a good year overall."

In a way, the game was reflective of how the whole year has ended for the 49ers. They put together a strong effort and had their chances, but ultimately fell short.

"It's hard to take a loss, but I couldn't be more proud of taking it with these girls," Link said. "There are no regrets from anyone on this team, and I'm happy to end it this way knowing that everybody on the team gave it their all."

Santa Clara will play its second-round match at No. 1 Stanford next weekend. LBSU, on the other hand, will begin its offseason routine and simply have to look forward to next year.

pointer with less than two seconds remaining.

Gulley finished the afternoon shooting a perfect 4-for-4 from the field, including all three of his attempts from long range. He and freshman Deng Deng scored 11 apiece for the 49ers.

The Lions responded after the break with a quick 11-0 run, which brought the score to within two at 44-42. The spurt was sparked by three long-range buckets in a five-possession stretch. The hot streak wouldn't last long, however, as the Lions shot just 27.6 percent (8 of 29) from distance on the afternoon.

Sixth-year LBSU head coach Dan Monson said the most disappointing area of the team's performance was its inability to hold leads and put the Lions away.

"We needed to be more active defensively and less active offensively," he said. "We've got to slow everybody down and get their confidence up. It's going to be difficult because we've got tough sledding coming up."

During the second half, LBSU's Branford Jones took a spill after colliding with a defender near midcourt and was unable to return to the game due to an apparent ankle injury.

"It looks pretty bad," Monson said. "In 15 minutes you can see he's going to be a pretty good player and a very capable backup for Mike (Caffey). It's going to be a big blow if it's as bad as we fear, but I can't jump to any conclusions before they x-ray him."

Up to that point, the freshman had tallied eight points, three assists, three rebounds and two steals.

Junior Rashaun Claiborne led the Lions with 17 points and four rebounds.

LBSU returns to action Tuesday night when it travels to take on USC at 6:30 p.m. at the Galen Center.
